Abstract

Direct restorations are the most common procedures in dentistry. Meeting the patients' desires when constructing an Aesthetic treatment plan has always been a large issue to dentists. Sometimes the patients' wishes are far from reality and are not applicable. In this course, we will address the most common conflicts between the patient's aims and the dentist's plan and how to solve that dilemma taking into consideration the most conservative approaches available. A general overview of current aesthetic concepts and techniques and an update of recent Aesthetic alternatives will be provided.

This course is specifically designed to address how the correct procedures can aid the restorative dentist to obtain a natural harmonious smile with a simplified approach. The course combines lectures, hands-on workshops, clinical videos, and group discussions. Various types of restorative techniques will be covered, including cosmetic, teeth whitening, composite modeling, layering, bonding, and adhesion. These treatment options will be discussed regarding their advantages, side effects, and success rates.

The course concentrates on clinical approaches that can aid clinicians in day-to-day practice. Case scenarios will be presented from an Aesthetic approach to improve the long-term aesthetic and functional outcomes. Finally, a problem-based approach and failure management and treatment of complex cases will summarize all the information gathered during this program.
